303 Main St. Cumberland, ME

Argan, a hypochondriac in this classic farce complains of a many imaginary ills, and his outrageous medical bills. If his daughter Angelique marries a doctor, he reasons, he will have free medical care but she is in love with another. In order to help Angelique, Argan's brother Beralde, and his maid Toinette expose the doctors as charlatans and reveal that his second wife only loves his money.

All troubles, real and imaginary are relieved by laughter.
